

Wrestlemania #9: Was Hogan The Right Choice?

At the end of Wrestlemania #9, Hogan popped up out of nowhere to win the world title in about a minute. Was this the right idea? I think you could argue that it was, but at this they needed to have Hogan put over Bret. For some reason that never happened, even though it was planned. The ending wasn't great, especially given that Hogan's pop was pretty weak. He did get cheered for when Gonzalez was standing in the ring after leaving Undertaker laying though. I'm not wild on it but I guess I could see them playing things like they had for the last 8 years.

Thoughts?
