

Wrestlemania #14: Best Passing Of The Torch Ever?

This was a really hard one to come up with a question for. The show is a lot better than I remember it being and it was hard to find anything for debate. The best I can do here is ask if there's ever been a better example of passing the torch to someone else than here with Austin. If there is, I can't think of it. Austin takes over as champion and is immediately the official top man in the company, which everyone knew already. Is this the best example of that moment ever? I'd certainly think so.

Thoughts?
