

Themed WWE PPVs Possibly Ending

Word on the street is that Vince has finally caught up to reality and is realizing that the themed PPVs don't add much. So what does this mean? This can only be a good thing. At the end of the day, there's almost no reason to follow a calendar instead of following the logical progression of the stories. Look at Taker vs. HHH when the Cell was announced. It came out of nowhere and it worked really well. It wasn't what I was expecting but it also made sense while also making me want to see the match. That's a great thing which you can't get with the themed shows happening at the same time every year. Good call on this.

Thoughts?