

Thought of the TNA: TNA And Superstables

I started doing some math last night and the numbers are a bit saddening. The first TNA heel superstable was S.E.X. It ran from the winter of 2002 until June of 2003. We'll call this six months.

After that came the Kings of Wrestling which evolved into Planet Jarrett/Jarrett's Army. Combining the two, this ran for just shy of two years.

Then came the double stables of Christian's Coalition and the Angle Alliance. These ran from February of 2007 to April of 2008, or about 14 months.

The Main Event Mafia ran from October of 2008 to approximately October of 2009, giving us another year.

Immortal started October 10, 2010 and ended either October 16, 2011 or April 15, 2012 depending on what you consider their actual ending.

Aces and 8's has been running for seven months now.

Some quick math tells you that, from a conservative standpoint, TNA has spent over six years running superstable angles. That's more than half the time they've been in existence as a company. To say they're repeating storylines is an understatement.
