

Thought of the Day: Hey, I Know You!

I'm listening to the sweet Wyatt Family theme (Broken Out in Love) and started to think. Bray Wyatt and his Family are coming to Raw. As most of you likely know, Wyatt used to be on the main roster as Husky Harris. Bray Wyatt is a completely new gimmick for him, which is something that is becoming more frequent lately. This means that fans are likely going to chant Husky Harris at him, which will get annoying in a hurry. Why do fans insist on doing this? They did it to Tensai by chanting Albert and I'm sure they've done it before then. It's no secret that he's a different guy and it's not like no one has ever been repackaged before. Why do fans insist on reminding everyone else that they recognize someone? It doesn't work that way in movies or on TV, so why do we constantly have to be reminded of someone's past identity in wrestling?