

Thought of the Day: You Can Observe A Lot By Just Watching

As taken from the sage of wrestling: Steve Austin. On one of his podcasts, Austin talks about finding a spot backstage where he could watch every match on a show to see what the people had been doing that night so he wouldn't be doing the same spots. For instance, if five people had worked on an arm that night, Austin would go after a lower back or a neck. It's such a basic idea but it could keep the fans slightly more entertained and have them more interested in your match. Now you have people playing video games during the show and the matches get a lot more generic. As always, Austin knows his stuff.
