

Sacrifice 2014 Preview

So yeah, this is tomorrow.

We'll start with the main event. I'll take Bully Ray to beat Bobby Roode in the tables match with a powerbomb. No seriously that's the main event. If you watch Impact, this is the match we've heard the most of all month long. I don't quite get the appeal of having people put each other through tables for a month and then pay to see them put each other through one more table but that's just me.

Eric Young keeps the title because....well because Eric Young is World Champion in a major wrestling company and according to them it's not a ripoff of Daniel Bryan.

I'll take Angelina to take the Knockouts Title because it's the easiest thing they can do to keep the division as boring as possible.

I'll actually take Storm to win the I Quit match, presumably through the use of someone else like Gunner's dad. Why this feud is still going is anyone's guess as this is about the fourth match that should have blown the thing off.

Angle/Willow over Carter/Spud to give the good guys their revenge. Again there's no real thinking in this but that's the case for almost everything in TNA anymore.

Give me Sanada over Tigre Uno in a match that just didn't need to be a best of three at all.

I have a feeling Shaw wins the Committed match over Anderson with Christy's help because Russo is back on the creative team as a consultant and that's one of his favorites.

Oh and the Wolves get the belts back which should be their first reign but we needed them to win in Japan or whatever.

As I'm sure you can tell, I REALLY do not care about this show at all. That was what went through my head the entire show on Thursday and it's the same case here. TNA is just not very interesting right now and the majority of the show feels like something they remembered doing before and just swapped the names around. It's not interesting for the most part and there really isn't much I want to see on this show which doesn't need to be a PPV in the slightest. Things can turn around, but I don't see much good going on at the moment.
