Four of them in this case. You have TJP, Hideo Itami and Tye Dillinger from the roster and Arn Anderson as a producer. I can't say I'm surprised at the first three as none of them seemed happy and they all probably wanted out. Maybe they're off to AEW (ok Itami is back to Japan and we all know it) or just the indy scene (which could mean AEW) but it's not like there's a ton of room on the WWE roster at the moment. None of the three were really doing anything in the first place so these aren't the biggest losses. I liked TJP, but if he's not getting the Cruiserweight Title back (which he isn't) and they won't put him on the main roster, it doesn't matter.

Anderson....I love the guy, but he's been there since 2001. That's a LONG time to have anyone around and I can understand getting rid of him. Maybe they just needed some fresh blood and if so, cool. People like Abyss and HURricane could offer something new and really, WWE needs just that right now.
