That one came out of nowhere. Bundy was someone who went a lot further than he probably should have, as he was little more than a giant with a splash as a finisher. Somehow that got him all the way to the main event of a Wrestlemania and a career revival in the 1990s. He's the definition of someone who went a long way on one match and that's a lesson that a lot of people can learn from on the independent circuit.
