

Sasha Banks And Naomi Walk Out On Monday Night Raw

There's your big twist for the week. Apparently Naomi and Sasha Banks walked out on this week's Monday Night Raw, when they were supposed to take part in the show's Six Pack Challenge main event, also featuring Doudrop, Nikki Ash, Becky Lynch and Asuka. Apparently Banks didn't like the creative, which would have seen Naomi winning, so Naomi went with them. WWE referenced it on Raw and issued a statement, which you can see below:

<https://twitter.com/SeanRossSapp/status/1526389791784321028/photo/1>

I believe the term here is egads and I'm not sure where to start. First of all, I know it might not have been the best creative or whatever the situation was, but walking out isn't a good idea. It's unprofessional and makes you look like you're throwing your toys out of the crib. To make it worse, this is hardly the first time that Banks has walked out on the company. At this point, I'm almost so sick of hearing about her leaving that I wouldn't mind if she didn't return. She's very talented, but either do your job or stay out.

As for Naomi, I hope she comes to her senses, because she might be talented but she isn't a big enough star to walk out on her own. Maybe she thinks being part of the extended Anoa'i family gets her out of trouble, but it might not be quite enough. On top of that, you have the Women's Tag Team Titles and...well maybe this is the way to get rid of those stupid things once and for all.

Overall, I'm not happy that this happened, but Banks has long run out of good graces to make up for something like this. How many times has she walked out now? I'm sure a lot of wrestlers are unhappy with how they are being presented, but stick around until your contract is up or something other than just walking out. Maybe this is fixed soon, but my goodness it's not looking great for either of them.