

Happy Anniversary With A New Look

It's kind of way overdue.

Ten years ago today, I launched this site and things have been rolling ever since. With that kind of an anniversary, it was time to freshen things up a bit around here and this is the result. Please note that I'm going to be tinkering with it but since I don't know what I'm doing, it is taking a bit more time. This is NOT the final product and there is a chance that I'll scrap the whole thing and switch to something I like better. Even if this goes badly, the old design can be pulled up with one button.

Everything under the hood is exactly the same so the reviews will still be coming up as usual. Hopefully there are some adjustments I can make to see what else can be improved but for now, the look does feel a bit less plain. Just like last time, thank you to AB Morales for designing the banner, as he's quite good at that kind of thing.

Thank you all for being around for any part of the ten years I've been doing this (especially you Jay, and I'm not being sarcastic). I'm still not sure what I did to deserve being able to make this my job but it has worked out far better than I ever would have expected when I put this place up. It started out as a place to store the reviews because I was clogging up WrestleZone too much and now, here we are with this being my full time job. It means more than you can imagine and thank you all for it very much.

One other note that might not be so popular: I might be starting to accept paid posts again. I'm not thrilled with having to do so but the pandemic has hurt the ad revenue a lot and I kind of need the extra help to bridge the gap a bit. I only have so much control over the content of the ads but AT MOST there will be one a week, and I would be stunned if it ever approaches that often. I know they're annoying and I don't like doing them, but it's upwards of a third of a week's worth of income for something that takes five minutes to do. I'm sorry that I have to do them but it's kind of a necessity for the time being.

With that out of the way, thank you again for everything and I'll be here as usual for as long as you want me to be, plus a little longer than that.

Happy Anniversary

This site launched nine years ago. It started off as a hobby because I had way too much going on over at WrestleZone and needed a place to store all of these things. It was hardly financially successful to start but now it has turned into something that lets me provide for my family while also watching a ton of wrestling. I'll be around as long as you all want me to be plus probably a bit longer so thank you all for sticking around and checking me out over the years. I know it's a bit of a cliché to say this but it really has changed my life for the much better and I don't know what I did to deserve all of the great things that it and you all have brought me over the years.

Happy Anniversary

Eight years ago today, I posted the first review on the site. Thank you all for coming here this long and I hope that you keep doing so. It's been a blast and that's going to be the case as long as you all want me around.

Happy Anniversary

To me. The first post ever on the site was three years ago today.

Good grief I sucked back then.

Ten Years Ago Today

Evolution officially formed on Raw, setting off well over a year of domination of the show. The team, composed of Randy Orton, HHH, Ric Flair and Batista, represented the past (Flair), present (HHH) and future (Orton and Batista) of wrestling. To say the team was dominant is an understatement, as they held all of the titles at the same time and three members would wind up winning world titles.

Happy Anniversary Montreal Screwjob

Fifteen years ago (yesterday), the wrestling world was changed forever when Vince said ring the bell, screwing Bret out of the WWF Title and causing more talk and more conspiracy theories about a single subject than ever before or since in wrestling. My question to you all: has there ever been a more controversial single moment in wrestling? I can't think of one.
