

E-Mail About Bryan

I think I might start posting some emails I get from readers and my responses to them. If nothing else it's better than replying to them in the comments.

Greetings! Once again, here I come with the need to pick your brain, if I'm allowed to do so..

Last Raw, Daniel Bryan was the main focus of Raw and WWE did a fine job establishing new obstacles for him to go through to get to the top of the mountain. Randy Orton, Triple H and the McMahons as a whole are those new obstacles. The argument that being screwed on Summerslam was the best thing for Bryan was proven right on that Raw, at least, with the fans standing firmly behind him. The fans and their support are the reason why Bryan is getting this investment from WWE.

My question is, if Bryan doesn't overcome all the obstacles WWE is putting in front of him, do you think he is in any sort of danger of losing steem and support from fans? I don't believe WWE will downright kill it, because if they wanted to do that, they would've done it a long time ago. But, I am concerned over the fact that they may accidentatly hurt it.

What I mean by this is that, while Bryan beating Orton is something that I can see happening, I don't think Bryan will beat HHH – for known reasons – if they should face. If HHH beats Bryan, because I have a feeling HHH will get into this just like he did with Punk, do you think Bryan's fanbase will remain strong or as strong as it is right now?

In your opinion, is Bryan a strong main-event figure enough to overcome the possible mistakes WWE does witht his storyline? Another question, I know it's months away and a lot can happen from now to then, but now where do you see Bryan at WMXXX?

Feel free to pick my brain any time. Just don't eat it as that could be a sign of the zombie apocalypse.

Anyway, yeah I think it could be a problem with Bryan losing steam. At the end of the day, we just sat through three months of Bryan proving himself and now he has to do it again. That's too much to ask for almost any storyline, no matter how loudly the fans are cheering for him. I can't picture Bryan beating HHH either, but that would be the big holy grail for him. Wrestlemania is too far away to predict but I would see Bryan in the WHC picture by then. Just a hunch.

Also if anyone wants to e-mail me, my address is kbwrestlingreviews@hotmail.com. It might take a day or so to reply but I'll get there eventually I assure you.