

2013 Awards: Worst Angle of the Year

It's awards time again. I've got 18 awards to hand out this year and as is my custom, I'll be doing one of these a day until the end of the year, which just so happens to be the day the Royal Rumble Count-Up stars. Up first: Worst Angle of the Year. I know it's easy, but I'm going with Big Show's firing/crying/threats of lawsuits. This story went on for months, never gave us any real conclusion (Big Show got cheated out of the title match and just started teaming with Mysterio like nothing happened) and worst of all, it involved LAWYERS.

This is rapidly becoming one of the most annoying things in wrestling. It's in WWE, TNA and was in ROH during the few weeks I watched their TV show. WWE has become obsessed with this idea and even had a recurring lawyer character in David Otunga (which is understandable as he actually is a lawyer). Think about it though: Christian used to threaten lawsuits for one more match, Del Rio threatened legal action against Sheamus, everyone threatens lawsuits against everyone at times and dear goodness it gets old fast. Stop having wrestlers hide behind lawyers and have them FIGHT.