

Big News To Open Raw

It might be the best way out of things. Becky Lynch vacated the Raw Women's Title and announced that Asuka won the title in last night's Money in the Bank ladder match. Asuka celebrated and Becky told her to go be a champion because Becky was going to go be a mother.

So that's probably all you'll see of Lynch for the next year or so and that's not a bad thing. Lynch held the title for nearly 400 days and there is no shame in going away for something as great as this. Asuka won a major match last night and the title needed some fresh blood anyway. Becky is already a legend and getting to come back and challenge for the title she never lost will be a fine way to go whenever she's ready. Good for her and Seth Rollins.

So Uh.... .THAT Just Happened

And I didn't see this one coming. Shane McMahon just returned to open Raw. It seems that only his hair has aged though.

2013 Awards: Surprise of the

Year

Another one with more options than I was expecting. It's rare for me to be surprised in wrestling but this year it happened several times.

First up, a note about TNA. This is usually a category where they can pull off some good entries but there's nothing this year. It's seemed like you can predict just about everything that happens every time they have a big show. That's a really bad sign and something they need to work at.

Anyway, on to the nominees. There are two of these that happened in the span of about five minutes.

First up, Daniel Bryan pinning John Cena clean. The question here wasn't would Bryan win, but rather how he would do it. People had been expecting to see something like a rollup or a cradle, but to debut a brand new move and cave John Cena's chest in with a running knee was a big surprise. I had the words "for two" written but had to backspace furiously.

Orton cashes in. Yeah people thought it might happen, but the way they executed it was nearly perfect. That delay before Orton's music hit was the perfect way to sucker the fans into believing nothing was happening. I snapped up when the music hit, which is the sign of a good surprise.

This brings us to the winner, which ironically is kind of obvious.

Mark Henry fakes retirement. it led to a one off match, it doesn't hold up incredibly well when you look at the details, but it was AWESOME live. I completely bought that Henry was retiring and that this was the end for him. The speech was great, the reaction was great, and the turn was great. I loved this and it was another example of why Mark Henry is underrated.

Remember to follow me on Twitter @kbreviews and pick up my new book of on the History of In Your House at Amazon for just $4 at:

And check out my Amazon author page with wrestling books for just $4 at:

Load WWE 2K14 With The Rocket Fuel!

In the words of someone funnier than I am, it finally froze over in Parts Unknown.