

The New Title...

...might be the dumbest thing I've ever seen. It's the 24/7 Title, which is the same rules as the Hardcore Title without the violence. Foley introduced the title to a disturbing amount of booing/silence and laid it down with the first champion being whomever ran out and picked it up. Titus O'Neil won and then got pinned by Robert Roode on the stage.

So yeah, it's a jobber title and open to all rosters and the belt's center plate just says 24/7. But hey, it's like in the Attitude Era and everything about that time was brilliant right?

History Has Been Made

Because we have a new champion.

Bobby Lashley won the Intercontinental Title from Dean Ambrose in a triple threat also including Seth Rollins. That's uh...rather odd as Lashley doesn't really have anything going on at the moment. Is there that much of a need to give him the title right now? I know Ambrose doesn't have anything going on either, but it seems a little silly to just hand the title to Lashley. Either way, at least he should be a good monster for someone to slay down the line.
