

Wrestlemania XXXV Preview: Kickoff Show: Wrestlemania Women's Battle Royal

Now with no specific name.

This is another match where I'll need to see the full field before being confident in my pick. It feels like the biggest layup in the world to have Asuka win here to get some heat back after losing the title to Charlotte, but I don't trust WWE to go with the most logical option. There aren't many good options in the match so far, but that's where I think we get to our actual winner.

I'll take Lacey Evans, because I have the blind faith that WWE actually has a plan for her with all those random cameos. There isn't much of a reason for this to be the case and Evans hasn't exactly showed a world of talent yet, but that's never stopped WWE before. I'll go with her winning, though I'll be rather happy if Asuka wins. It's not like it means anything though, as Naomi didn't exactly rocket up the card last year. But hey: a swerve ending right?

Pick from someone.

After all the controversy over Fabulous Moolah, it's time to get down to the actual point...and it's really hard to care. We just saw a much bigger and more important women's battle royal about two months ago and now we're supposed to get fired up for this. I haven't been able to care about it for the most part as it's just a match that we've seen recently without much else to it.

I'll take...Bayley to win the thing I guess, as she and Sasha Banks are pretty clearly ready for a big time feud. Other than that though, who else is supposed to win the thing? A lot of the names in the thing (of fourteen announced) are just cannon fodder and that leaves a handful of options to win the match. Other than that the only real options (barring a big surprise entrant) are Banks and Becky Lynch, unless you have someone out of left field win it and then go nowhere as a result.
